- 13 Hyman P. Minsky. Untitled. Handwritten notes. (Undated).
 [“...One issue which I believe may be neglected in the discussions of technology and innovation and their diffusion is the significance of finance and the technical-banking (generally speaking) arrangements of an economy...”]
 [Note by Bruce MacMillan 9.11.08: Attached sticky note “This is Minsky’s comments on an unidentified paper by Labiri”.]
- 2 Hyman P. Minsky. Compartmentalization. (Undated).
 [“The logic of the argument in the Administration proposal is to allow each institution to go where its management see profit opportunities. There need not be any restriction of ownership, of geographical domain or of lines of commerce...This argument reflects the blinders put on by the Smithian approach to the analysis of markets: not only are markets self-organizing systems but the entire set of markets that constitute an economy self-organize and achieve an outcome which is in some meaningful way a best. However, the compartmentalized financial structure was imposed in the aftermath of the Great Depression as a result of a belief that the free wheeling financial structure of the 1920s was at least in some measure responsible for the great debacle of capitalism. The Great Depression saw the imposition of constraints upon financial structures...]

 ["The financial instability hypothesis is a variant of post-Keynesian economics in two senses. The first is that it rejects the legitimacy of the re-interpretation of Keynes that is derived from the formalization of Hicks, Hansen, Modigliani and Patinkin. This is the interpretation that has been incorporated into the neo-classical synthesis. The second sense in which the financial instability hypothesis is an example of Post-Keynesian economics is that it uses the basic insights and constraints of The General Theory...]

 [“Reform of banking and finance is ‘on the agenda’ in the United States. The Bush Administration has put forth superficial proposals to modify the functions and the geographical area banks can service. Nothing the Bush Administration proposes addresses the deep contradiction of American finance, which centers around the governance of corporations and the way ‘other people’s money’ is managed by pension funds, mutual funds, insurance companies and even University endowments.
 Bryan Burrough and John Helyar. Barbarians at the Gate. New York, NY: Harper & Row, ©1990, a recent best seller, told the exciting story of the $25 billion ‘takeover’ of RJR Nabisco by a brash representative of the ‘honorable rich’, Kravis and his company. RJR (tobacco: Camel and Winston cigarettes) and Nabisco (food: Oreos and shredded wheat) were American corporate giants which successfully generated torrents of cash. Their true cash flow greatly exceeded the reported profit. RJR-Nabisco management (abuttet?) their position by channeling an enormous amount of cash into managerial perquisites such as apartments, luxury (rent?) villas, limousines, a private air force and lavish entertainment. Huge fees were paid to celebrities: the golfer Jack Niclaus purportedly received one million dollars a year to play an occasional round of golf with customers and board members. A fundamental problem of all giant corporations in which the managers are not ... is how to assure that the company is run for the benefit of the stockholders and not the management.”]

 [Note by Bruce MacMillan 9.25.08: Prof. Minsky analyzes the average return on baseball cards and compares it with the return on IBM stock shares. He discusses a wide range of investment bubbles.
 [“...The surge in the prices of baseball cards is one of several bubbles in asset prices in the 1970s and 1980s. Consider the rapid growth in the external debts of Mexico, Brazil and Argentina...One of the puzzles of the 1980s was the rapid rise in the financial wealth of Donald Trump...The increase in the U.S. real estate prices in the 1980s was regional, and concentrated in the Northeast and in coastal California...at the end of the 1980s, interest rates on bonds in Japan began to increase sharply in response to higher inflation and a more contractive monetary policy - and then investors began to realize that the returns on real estate and equities were too low. The equity prices in Tokyo and Seoul fell by forty percent, while the equity prices in Taipei fell by seventy five percent...The key question is why so many varied bubbles developed in the last several decades. The most general answer is that sharp changes in inflation rates and interest rates lead to extremely volatile movement in asset prices. And one these price movements begin, then on occasion momentum may develop and feed on itself-at least for awhile. Non-scientific. Yes. But so are bubbles. Versions of this talk were given to the Univ. of Chicago Graduate School of Business Clubs in Boston, New York, Washington, and Paris.”]

[“A further point. An old truism is that money doesn’t manage itself, i.e. unless there are central bank or other government controls, money will disrupt the economy by either fostering an explosive expansion or setting off a debt deflation. In today’s institutional structures “Money cannot manage itself”, becomes “Finance cannot manage itself.” “How can policy, which now encompasses the design of institutional structures, set up institutions which so constrain the evolution of financing structures that endogenous destabilizing forces within finance are contained?”, is a question that needs to be addressed. This is of interest for both the Banking and Finance Committees (of the U.S. Congress) and the JEC (Joint Economic Committee of the U.S. Congress). I hope to see you in early November. If you don’t make it to the November Conference, I will get in touch once it is over. Hyman P. Minsky, Distinguished Scholar, The Jerome Levy Institute“]
