QUOTE OF THE WEEK
"I think it's (the abolition of women's curfew) a fine idea. By the time we are twenty-two we should be responsible and if we are not then it's tough."
-- Maryn Lebeczohn, The Bard Observer, Oct. 11

Councilman Trenner moved Monday night that Council recommend to the Administration that a copy of the letter drawn up by the Students for a Democratic Society be attached to SS-109 upon request of the individual student.

Councilwoman Boldt asked if the letter would be attached only if the student asked that his academic rating not be submitted. Bruce Lieberman, co-chairman of SDS who presented the letter, said that the letter could only be sent with or without the class standing.

Dean Hodgkinson said that to send out such a letter stating that the marking system was invalid, would then invalidate the class standing of a student who was doing well at Bard. He said that the letter should state that, in the opinion of that particular student, the marking system of Bard places his academic rating in jeopardy.

Councilwoman Raphael asked if Mr. Lieberman thought that the letter would have any effect on the draft boards. Mr. Lieberman said that was not the important point of the letter; what was most important was formulating the most flexible position possible. The student still has the choice of including or not including his class standing; use of the letter, however, avoided the statement that "Mr. X does not want his grades sent in" which was tantamount to suicide. Mr. Lieberman thought there was nothing inequitable in the letter, and nothing the Administration should not stand by.

The Dean said that since the last paragraph made it clear that in the opinion of the given student,
"his scholastic ranking is an inequitable method of determining his status within the Selective Service system," he would be happy to consider the letter in light of that last paragraph.

The motion passed 6-0-3.

The Observer's request for its budget was postponed again this week.

Editor Harvey Fleetwood blamed "a series of misunderstandings which arose in the past week over the role of Council and the administration in financing the newspaper." Mr. Fleetwood said that he would present the budget next week after meeting with the resident again. He said that he planned to publish one more issue, bringing the total number of five issues this semester, without benefit of budget, and that he was personally assuming responsibility for paying for these issues.

Councillor Trompen asked what had become of last year's Senior Class gift of birth control information. The dean said that there had been a meeting of interested persons and that it was thought that the pamphlets might be distributed from the infirmary. Chairman Reiger said that when some final decision was reached it would be brought before Council.

Mr. Fleetwood asked what had happened to the committee formed last semester to look into the hiring of a student-selected professor.

Chairman Reiger said that the committee had not several times last semester and after much discussion felt that it could come to no conclusion.

He said that they had written to other colleges and no information had been forthcoming.

Mr. Lieberman said that SDS was tackling this question in the next two weeks and would contribute significantly to any such discussion.

Treasurer Rojone moved that $342 be granted to the Literature Club pending the approval of their constitution by the Student Senate.

The motion passed 9-0-0.

Miss Boldt moved that $25 be granted to the "Entertainment Committee to bring up Don Shepherd for the afternoon of October 6."

Mr. Don Michaels, chairman of Entertainment Committee, said that he had been asked by Miss Boldt to see a Mr. Shepherd.

Mr. Rojone recommended voting against this measure and urged Mr. Michaels to rearrange his schedule to fit Don Shepherd in.

The motion failed 1-7-1.

Miss Boldt asked the Dean why it was the policy to have the road to Hopkins house run the long way around rather than through the Gatehouse.

Councillor Lensing said that at the present the road ran right by his living room, kitchen, and practically through his bed room.

Councillor Edmonds said that there had been several meetings between the Safety Committee and the E.G. representative about this problem and other related safety problems.

Miss Boldt asked if it might not be possible for E.G. to send a representative to Council. Mr. Kreiger said that much of this fell under the jurisdiction of Institutional Committees.

Mr. Edmonds said that a lot of discussion belongs in safety committee, and that he would be happy to report back to Council.

Mr. Tromper moved $200 for the Anthropology-Sociology Club. There was no written budget and no constitution had been submitted. On these grounds, Miss Boldt moved to postpone discussion.

The motion passed 8-0-1.

The recent turn of Civil Rights rhetoric demands that we re-evaluate the aims and character of a movement that has grown from the meager bus boycotts of 1954 to the recent proposal of a $500 Billion Dollar Freedom Budget to end Negro poverty.

The phrase "Black Power" now thunders across the land, underlined in meaning but turgid in emotional suggestivity. The new doctrine has provoked a cleavage in "the Movement": Black Power advocates, Stokely Carmichael and Floyd McKissic, take one side, Martin Luther King and Roy Wilkins take the other. To some, like Bayard Rustin, the dispute threatens "to ravage the entire Civil Rights Movement."

To be sure, the disagreement concerns means and ends: Carmichael's proponents of racial self-interest propose that "the economic foundation of this country must be shaken...a totally different America must be born"; while Martin Luther King and his associates press for desegregation as the most effective means for Negro admission to the existing American middle class.

It is not to be debated here whether the Civil Rights Movement is in fact obsolete. What should be the object of concern is whether Negroes can be served by a doctrine which postulates "black consciousness" as the means to ideological, indeed, utopian ends.

Bayard Rustin points out in September's Commentary that Stokely Carmichael's "extravagant rhetoric" about "taking over" in the districts of the South where Negroes are in the majority would mean Negro acquisition of only two Congressional seats and control of eighty local counties -- an advance both insignificant and impractical (the Negro Congressmen could do nothing by themselves to reconstruct the face of America).

But most importantly, Carmichael's notion of "black consciousness" militates against white coalitional support. Witness the dismissal of white liberal elements in SNCC as vestiges of "white supremacy" (see Rustin in Commentary). For Carmichael, Martin Luther King and Roy Wilkins have not only been too slow in delivering the Negro from his "oppression", but through pressing for alliances with labor and the white liberal establishment they have really exacerbated "white middle class hypocrisies". Carmichael's refusal to support the 1966 Civil Rights Bill stands as a revolution within the Movement; it calls "Black Power" in contradiction to the "obsolete" parent.

If, then, "Black Power" recognizes the attainment of its "totally different America" in estrangement from coalitional politics, it assumes the form of ideological racism. Note: I distinguish it from the racist ideology of Black Nationalism. Ideological racism characterizes itself in the propagation of an invented racial pride. Carmichael trumpets race like "self-respect, pride in the history of black people." But what is most significant -- his pride has substance only in so much as it justifies itself against grievance, against "oppression." No one can say that the Negro has legitimate grievance; just as do the Indians, the Puerto Ricans, or the American Chinese. Hence, racial pride is an invention, a creation, such as Hitler's cultivation of "Aryan" pride found emotional justification in the myth of "the stab in the back", or European rapine at Versailles. I do not question here the possibility of a genuine Negro culture with traditions and institutions. But when such studies are intended to bolster "racial pride" than rigorous criticism is needed.

The Negro, I am afraid, is being molded into service as a kind of substitute for the "proletarian" of the 1930's. Puffed up "Negro culture" attempts to depict him much in the same light as the old "worker". One sees again those "mytho-sentimental attributions", as Jeffrey Hart calls them, "warm-hearted spontaneity, solidarity outside the law, superior sexuality, and natural generosity." All these elements combine to form "black consciousness". They are inventions of demography that demand, "Give me your freedom, and I'll give you pride."

The Negroes today, to quote Rustin, "are in worse economic shape, live in worse slums, and attend more high-segregated schools than in 1934." The situation is worsening politically too. The victories of Mahone in Maryland, and Maddox in Georgia, the failure of the 1966 Civil Rights Bill -- all testify to America's awakening to "racism in reverse." Black Power and racial consciousness do not serve the Negro. Perhaps then the new Black Power rhetoric represents the breakup of the old Civil Rights Movement. If it does, then the Negro had better prepare himself to be the victim of a greater injustice.

SPHINX MAHALL, JR.

The note from Jima Linda Boldt, dated Oct. 3, and the article in this week's Observer, indicate there are certain winds blowing through that little Limbo known as House residents Committee.

The Committee is and should remain a closed committee. The matters that are discussed in detail there must remain confidential for the protection of student and committee alike. There are certain drawbacks, however, to this policy of silence. Word of the committee's actions filter back to each dorm in a manner which is, at best, erratic. Except for an occasional memorandum from the chairman of HRC, the only way in which the constituents of a particular House resident are informed of the committee's activities and "philosophies of opinion" is either through the HRC's remarks (which may be colored by "opinion of a given faction") or by that good, old stand-by, rumor.

It is evident from the two public utterances issued approximately within a week of each other that there are several important problems occupying the collective mind of HRC. The committee may have other interests besides off-campus interfraternity violations and the abolition of curfew for senior women but those remain deep, dark, secret. That concern HRC will eventually concern the community; it would be in the interests of HRC, therefore, to alert that community to its actions and fields of interest. The privacy of its meetings must not be violated by any of the news media. Informing the community must be done by the committee as a whole. Perhaps by issuing progress reports once or twice a semester, reports which avoid the specifics and discuss in general what has been done, or what will continue. Such action on the part of HRC would help to squash rampant rumors and crystallize opinion.

Now can any committee hope to ascertain public opinion without first informating that public as to its actions? Îlene Rosen

GODDLY Theater Review

Contrary to popular opinion, the Goddly can praise as well as damn. A great deal of praise is due to the members of the drama department involved in this week's production of John Mortimer's "The Dock Brief" and August Strindberg's "Mäster". "The Dock Brief", a comedy involving only two characters, was a masterpiece of both acting and direction. Especially noteworthy was Jones Rosenbaum in the role of Morgenstahl, the aging and unsuccessful barrister. Mr. Rosenbaum showed a strong flair for subtle comedy without resorting to the level of slapstick so often found in non-professional productions. Rufus Boston's portrayal of "Dock", the cynical murderer, and Levin Mizzlitzick's direction also left little to be desired.

The second play presented, "Mäster", was unfortunately not as successful. Although there was an overly contrived plot and unrealistic characters, the production was rescued from mediocrity by the performances of Christine Miller as Alonore and sponsor Hofee as Lindervist, both of whom played, or rather overplayed, their roles to perfection.

The major criticism of the productions as a whole is the lack of disparity between the two plays. The broad humor of "The Dock Brief" would have been more effective had it been contrasted with a straight drama, rather than the gross characterizations of "Mäster" which seemed present in "Mäster". However, in spite of this and several minor flaws, "The Dock Brief" and "Mäster" provided an interesting and entertaining evening at the theater.

WHAT DOES S.D.S. MEAN TO YOU??

The Bard Students for a Democratic Society has for the last two weeks been trying, somehow, anyway, to publicize its actions and policy. Of the GODDLY being generous souls who will listen to anyone, no matter how sick, are now giving them their chance.

On Wed., Sept. 28, SDS held a meeting to determine their policy as relates to the war, the draft, and their 11 point program for the Bard community. It's been two weeks now and while we haven't heard much about the 11 point program, we certainly have heard more than enough about the war and the draft.

To those who might not have heard, the United States is presently involved in a small, by some standards, war (yet unofficially in Southeast Asia). SDS is opposed to this war as it is "unjust and immoral." SDS is also opposed to the draft as it is "a tool of this unjust war." It (the draft, not SDS) also leaves a person with "no choice as to how he is going to die". How SDS can isolate the draft as being a tool of only this particular war is, we suppose, self-explanatory?

All that resulted from the meeting of Sept. 28 was the adoption of a constitution, and, amid loud cries of "sellout" (What's this, disorder in the ranks?) the adoption of a letter which SDS hopes will be sent, signed by the dean to the Selective Service System along with S.O.S. 109 (a little letter to form which tells the local draft board's a student's rank in his class and which can determine whether a student ends up at the school of his choice or in Salagon).

In order to get that letter out, another meeting was set for the following week. This meeting began on the program for the following week.

Mr. Jeff Albert, who was diligently copying a paper in the library arrived first. Later, by half an hour, Mr. Bruce Lieberman appeared wearing the proper button prominently displayed on his lapel, and the meeting swung into (what we supposed was) high gear. At this meeting, at least, there were no screams of sellout (possibly because those who chose not to come were serving at the last meeting were not present.). This time various measures for making the campus aware of the war were discussed. Mr. Libertas proposed that interested students and teachers in some way introduce the SDS ideology into their respective fields, i.e. dance majors present on anti-war (or anti-draft, please choose one) dance concepts, literature majors write anti-war or anti-draft (again please choose only one) literature. We suppose music majors will write even more protest songs, math majors could compile statistics, economics majors could keep track of war expenditures, and psychology majors could ask themselves why???

Another proposal was that stronger action both on a personal level (such as refusing to buy from NATO and on the school level (like lowering the flag one day a week and replacing it with the U.S. flag) be taken. We can't help but wonder why lower the flag for only one day a week, and why replace it with the U.S. flag of all things when it would seem a pink petticoat would do nicely.

Later there was some talk of workshops, which people who don't want to attend SDS meetings (although we can't, for the life of us, see why anyone in his right mind would want to attend one in the first place), could attend to learn passi-vaism, and anti-war techniques, but in effect (well, in truth, anyway) nothing was really settled and the meeting left off rather where it started.

As the meeting dissolved the unanswered question of co-chairman Jeff Alberts echoed in our ears:

"What the hell are we gonna do?"

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS:

Gentlemen:

Recently acquired by the Albee Avengers Beautification Subcommittee was a revealing lifesize portrait of former Ward 6A man, Wayne Liversmore. The portrait by Alice Loh (Hard, '66), was executed in partial completion of her senior project requirements. Miss Loh, a student in the classical portrait tradition, used as her motif for this mummy opus, a theme of Nero and the decadence of late Rome.

Mr. Liversmore, known as Wayne to his friends, provided a striking characterization of the infamous pyromaniac. Also featured in this work are the figures of Guy Frank, Andy Frank, Paul Schneider, and Danny Friedman, and, in this reporters opinion, Susan Veit. No other figures remain as yet unidentified.

The imaginative portrayal of the human anatomy can only be attributed to the fact that few or none of the subjects posed as they are depicted. In Miss Loh's words, "The only reality one can know is one's own reality."

"This painting," said an unidentified Avengers spokesman, "has been hung in the Wayne Liversmore Memorial Sitting Room cornered in the honor of their beloved brother, who was often known to haunt the Albee byways at strange hours and was particularly fond of the room which the Avengers have dedicated to his memory. We hope," the spokesman continued, "that this will be the beginning of a major cultural center."

Certainly the Avengers sentiments are compelling and the living memory of Mr. Liversmore is a moving force. In the words of one of the Avengers, "This picture brings tears to my eyes."

The formal opening of the Liversmore room is scheduled for Friday night at 11:30 PM. B.Y.O. R.S.V.P. The Albee Avengers

To the Editors:

I would like to reply to Mr. Lites' letter in particular and to the criticism levied against BRAC and myself in general. In the first place, there is controversy over BRAC's financial situation. Although I was not prepared to give a detailed account of the summer projects expenses at the recent council meeting, as I had not been previously requested to do so, there was nothing "Little Orphan Anniebush about my request for money to pay our rent and phone bill. Council has always done this in the past. I prepared a precise record of BRAC's summer expenditures which was submitted, along with a report of our activities, to Council on Oct. 3.

I would like to know precisely what the Gadfly people are upset about in regard to BRAC's money. Do you think we are financially irresponsible? If so, I refer you to our summer report, which Council found legitimate enough to reward with applause. We also have receipts which verify the report, in case you feel we are misusing the funds.

Do you object to the amount of money BRAC receives? If so, I would point out that BRAC'S active membership is greater than any group on campus. I challenge Mr. Lites to "prove" that we have not the membership we claim. On a day-to-day, long-term basis we have more people involved in more varied programs (Arts and Crafts, Negro history, Tutorial, Dance, theater) than any other group on campus. I do not believe that this makes BRAC superior, but I do contend that it requires a good deal of money.

Do you feel that Convocation money should not be allocated to a group such as BRAC? If so, I reply that BRAC, like all other clubs, grew out of the interest of hard students. There are a substantial number of dedicated people who have chosen BRAC as their "extracurricular" activity at Bard. There is no reason why Council should not consider this group as it funds other interest groups. Therefore, if Mr. Lites' suggestion of "purely voluntary contributions" or a vote on what percentage of Convocation funds BRAC should receive were to be instituted, it should be applied to all interest groups, every committee or club which receives funds.

My last question to the Gadfly staff is do you disapprove of the way in which BRAC is spending its money in Kingston? Since this is the only substantive issue in regard to BRAC's money, I would like to dwell on this point. Mr. Lites believes we are instigating racism by attempting to create "racial consciousness." Let me quote Stokely Carmichael, Chairman of SNCC: "Essential to the process of organism living Negroes to win power is the conquest of fear and the development of 'racial consciousness'; self-respect, pride in the history of black people, our culture and institutions." The type of racial consciousness we are speaking of has to do with racial pride, the type of racial consciousness which Mr. Lites is frightened of is something no one has to talk about in a Negro in America. He says Negroes should be organized as Americans, not Negroes. But to be conscious of being black in America is to be more than an American. It is to an American who was held in slavery and subjected to every kind of humiliation by a white American, merely because one is a black American. Racial con-

P.S. Mr. Lites, the Albee Avengers are appreciative of the criticism we have received. It is a necessary part of our growth.
soullessness did not cause Watts --- American racial policies caused Watts. Riots have occurred in ghettos long before the phrase "Black Power" was coined.

Finally, the Godfly continually criticizes our "failure" in Kingston. Since none of our students were ever suspended and we assume their standards for evaluating our activity are based on our own admissions. It is true that we are critical of our progress. This does not mean that we have failed. It means partially that our goals are difficult to achieve and we are honest in our self-criticism. We may be short of our end goal, but we have won many important victories along the way. I suppose EMAC is the only group which seems to fall short of its goals because it is almost the only club which presents explicit goals. But really, or, like, why would we "purposely pick a project of such elite that we knew it could not be classed"? What does such a question imply? This level of attack is worthy of the National Enquirer.

I repeat the plea of Alan Krebs and Mr. Farrelly concerning criticism and debate are welcome, but sarcastic distortions and intimations, editorial comments which refer to female critics as "Snowhearts" or "Sady" are really unwelcome for in a nature publication, a Journal of Opinion ought still to be a Journal of Fact, and the opposition is entitled to a little respect.

Sincerely,
Alison Raphael

To the Editors:
The draft seems to be as vital an issue as one can find being discussed among the majority of college students. The issue which civil rights engaged for so long has been collapsed, at least among male students, by a more immediate, though certainly no less idealistic concern. The Observer seems to be aware of this prime concern and accordingly printed a most sinister photograph, complimenting a front page article on the Council's approval (whatever that means) of the S.D.S letter concerning the Selective Service System. That forbidding picture seemed to convey more day to come or the same fist would violently pound down doors and drag off innocent college students. The gravity of the whole situation demands comment.

The letter which council approved would not be sent by the administration to local draft boards at the request of a student. This letter describes the uniqueness of the Bard program and explains why the evaluation of students not selected for class rank would be unfair to Bard students. Even if Bard were so unique in this respect, why should the letter be sent only at the student's request? If the student body alone chooses students to be classified on the "meaningless" basis of rank, and allow others, at their own choosing, either to send the cover letter with rank, or to evade the normal procedure of classification by requesting the letter and withholding rank. Certainly the only moral thing to do would be to require everyone to withhold the rank and send the cover letter. Is the administration, by sending the letter, officially stating its agreement with the unfairness of the system to the 3rd student? If the administration maintains that the system, on account of being unconstitutional, cannot work, then the letter should cover everyone. If the administration is not giving official sanction, neither agreeing nor disagreeing with the equity of the system, why should the college have anything to do with sending the letter?

The final paragraph of the S.D.S. letter reads: "In light of these circumstances, Blank, whose Form 109 is attached, does not in good conscience feel that his scholastic ranking is an equitable method of determining his status within the Selective Service System." Thus it is stated explicitly in the letter that the basis for the action (withholding class rank and or sending the letter) is a matter of individual "feeling" and conscience. If this is so, and if the letter does not reflect the position of the administration, thus negating any influence institutional sanction might provide, then the letter should be sent by individuals and have nothing whatever to do with the administration.

This is just one aspect of the problem under discussion. Certainly the case for Bard's uniqueness with regard to class rank and the draft is feeble. If comparisons with conditions at other schools are considered, public universities for example, the case just crumbles.

In closing, I would like to suggest that S.D.S., for the sake of a consistent irrationality, request that the administration send a cover letter with applications to graduate schools explaining how the grading system here is really so unique, occult, and confusing, that the grades themselves, and the class ranks computed from them, are really quite meaningless and unjust.

John H. McDonald

The Godfly is similar, in many ways, to radio station WABN in New York, or educational television. They are listener and viewer supported. We are (hope to be) reader supported. We cannot survive without your contributions. So far, we have collected only $24.00. This will not even pay for the issue we have published so far. We have already been forced to postpone publication of several letters and contributions because we could not afford the extra paper and printing costs.

The Godfly is an independent journal and has pledged itself to provide a forum for the articulation of student opinion concerning issues relevant to the Bard community. In order to remain independent, we have decided to seek the entirety of our financial support from any one institution on campus -- Council Administration, or other.

We believe we could remain independent in any case, but we would rather avoid even the temptation of becoming a "house Journal" for the administration.

The Godfly will cease publication if sufficient funds are not raised. We don't ask you to agree with the positions of our editors or of our contributors; but if you believe there is value in the letter press, if you wish to see variety of opinion and expression at Bard -- SUPPORT.
