College Hears Count Sforza on War

Diplomat Visits Saint Stephen's Two Days After Carnage

It is a great occurrence for St. Stephen's when it has the good fortune to be visited by a person of such a high and noble position and charm as Count Sforza. On Tuesday of this week May the eighteenth, the Count gave a lecture in the presence of the College, on "Modern Europe and Its Future." On Friday the Count gave another lecture for the history students on the causes of the war on both sides. On both occasions he is peculiarly well fitted to talk, being not only one of Europe's most experienced statesmen, but a personal friend of many of the great statesmen of the world. He took an active part both in the diplomatic and in the actual fighting of the Great War. The Count said that the relations which the Great War had created him greatly even above his dreams, when he said, he had observed here a strong military movement in progress. This movement appears to be a recent attack to the strong anti-German feeling of ten years ago, and in the popular mind at least, takes the form of reuniting Germany's brilliant history in the fighting of the war. It was with the particular dexterity of overcoming such enemies in popular tongues that he wished to express.

Count Sforza divided the origin of the war into two distinct and interconnected fields: the near and the distant. He suggested no new treaties, unimportant as he modestly said; all that had to give were the opinions of one who had taken part in many of the great occurrences in Europe from 1914 to 1919.

So far as the war's remote cause was concerned, every nation in Europe must share equally the responsibility. Every power, even, every holy power, was in some way, and in some degree, directly to blame for the starting of the war.

As for the direct causes, however, he was able to answer with much greater ease to two or three conditions of which he sincerely believed that Austria, when confronted with the barbarous murder of the Archduke and Duchess of Hungary was compelled by such an outrage to prepare for war upon Serbia. In spite of the appearance of a truce, this new interest is increasing. It is interesting to observe that one week before August 8th, a plane was photographed on the military airfields at Berlin, Vienna and Rome in a sort of rehearsal of the Great War. Before describing this rehearsal, something must be said of the political arrangement of the Austrian empire as it was fifteen years ago.

Austria and the group of Magyars states attached there, in reality two distinct units, the latter being the political slave of the former. The Magyars states were aware of their servile position, and when in 1812 Serbia was being surrounded by the hordes of the Archduke, and the Austrian government was compelled by such an outrage to prepare for war upon Serbia. Kap's and Eleguines Dance In New Houses
House Parties To Close Dance Weekend By Kindly Weather

During St. Stephens' Prom weekend there generally occurs one sandstorm, but last Friday's was not only a gust of dust, but rather was to be regarded as the event of the year. "St. Stephen's Prom Weather" is aptly named, because it has been the prom itself about which the weather has been written. The fraternities have undoubtedly admitted that he enjoys their usual line of play, but he feels that the number of parties which have been attended in the last week was more than adequate for the number of members.

The weather continued perfect for a week or so practically. So it didn't rain for a week or so, but the ground is getting very dry. The 3 earth lying about the two houses and the sand blowing about the style of the evening would have been nice. The ground was dry and the dust had a great deal to be thankful for it, by the way, that during the week, the weather was not too bad for the last half-hour. Just so, the 4th term will not have to do without a dance. Just so, the 4th term will not have to do without a dance.

The dance given by Rapa Gom- na, in the new house, was a real success. The party held here, like most other parties in the town, was a good one. The music was provided by the orchestra of the Donn, and the dancing was very good.
