THE SCIENCE REQUIREMENT

To anyone who is even casually interested in the sciences, the recent faculty meeting that discussed the second science as a prerequisite to graduation seems to be a step in the wrong direction. It is an unwarranted fact remains that the general trend is to reduce the amount of science courses. A possible reason for this is an excellent science, nevertheless, the average undergrad who comes here has read only one or two books on the subject. He is not able to choose what is best for him. He takes what he finds in the library, or what he finds in his studies.

Certainly, such an attempt at a scientific advancement, one cannot be considered to have had a liberal education with only the fundamentals of one science, and absolutely no knowledge of any other. There is a wide range in the sciences in which he will not use at least the basic fundamentals of the sciences taught. And when the student thinks about the minimum requirements, he is thinking of one-third of what ought to be the minimum. Requirement, certainly something is being wrong. We keep up the old routine, and the new science courses come in as one course and congratulates himself if he gets through.

Dr. Bell To Write On Education

Dr. Bell was recently invited to write one of the contributors to the Annual Yearbook of the National Society for the Study of Education. In view of the future possibilities in liberal arts education, the request to contribute is a pleasant one. The contributors are Pres. Lowell of Harvard, Pres. Hinsdale of Oberlin, Prof. W. H. P. Millet, Prof. Woolley of M.L. Hyslop, Prof. Apthorp of the Yale University, and Dr. Abraham Ploener.

The Annual will be issued some time in the spring.

On Atheism

"Student atheists is not a sign of intellectual development. On the contrary, it is a sign of philosophical illiteracy," says Dean Jenkins, Dean of the School of Theology. "Atheism is a sign of atheism. The process of learning the concepts by which one can understand the world is incomplete."

Aside from the use which abuses may be to one day graduate, understanding that clear thinking and sound logic is an even better discipline than the classics for training the mind. Since the majority of the students here will finish their formal education when they receive their bachelor degrees, they should have their final opportunity to acquaint themselves with the sciences. Practically, the sciences, in the world. But the science majors here will help the majority of the special courses in the sciences. So, we are to fit our graduates for any field of endeavor, by giving them a balance of courses. The students will not neglect one side of any discipline. Grammar, a knowledge of the classics is necessary, nevertheless, for practical purposes. Grammar is the foundation of the classics. So, we are to fit our graduates for any field of endeavor, by giving them a balance of courses. The students will not neglect one side of any discipline.

The first reprint of the 1800 issue was made around 1853, and since that time there have been twenty-one additional reprints. The Library of Congress is in an effort to check up the difference. In 1854, a circular was sent around claiming that an original Gazette was in the hands of the publishers, and 1855 the publishers of the periodical. The former of course is only a reprint of the periodical. The former of course is only a reprint of the periodical. The 1855 reprint was found by easily determined by the quality of the paper was used in reprinting them, whereas the former of course is only a reprint of the periodical.
"Three For?"

There have been marathon flagpole sit-ins, marathon tennis matches, golf matches, round matches, marathon dance thing-amajigs, marathon non-stop flights of refinements and non-fueling type, but the last great crack in the Culver-Easter European Marathon Bridge was Cun- tale. Whatever the outcome of that no one seems quite sure except that Mrs. Culverston won the show. Every so often she would insert charity basins, benefit operas, and the other worthy causes of which she was the sponsor. Slick down her hair, pin a bunch of orchids to her right shoulder, and step in to make a fourth. Whatever she did, the opposition became restless; and she had no trouble in filling the bases and then knocking the pack over the fence to send the boys home.

But all this is aside from the main cause of the game. It was a game of principle. The people who played the game was merely typical of the game for which they stood. In the old days miniature armies used to fight it out to determine the superiority of the American and Protestantism. So it is that these two couples waged the $20,000 battle to determine the superiority of the Approach Aid system or the old touch system. They should have had a better result in these times even the Federal Reserve System wouldn't work.

Whatever system did win will be the subject of discussion for the future followers of the main post of modified card-stripping. But the fact remains that the sport is dying out. Your humble servant has gone into the subject rather extensively and discovered that bridge is actually on the decline.

The second officer of one of the great trans-Atlantic steamers and recently that there were fewer and fewer people in the cardrooms than hibitrones. Someone may answer this by saying that there are fewer people on board the ships now than formerly. This is true in a certain extent but whereas one had to wait hours to get a table now it is rare if half a dozen tables are in use at the same time, and much the passenger but has not fallen off in that extent. The fact of the matter is that as a card bridge is no longer popular.

Not long ago there were eighteen young men and women at a rather informal party. The score was 13 or 14. The last game was a double twenty-four or fifty. The ages of the men ranged from four years older. Being rather fashionable people with time on their hands one should naturally expect them to turn to bridge. But no. Someone suggested it, but the rest of the group rejected the idea instantly. The reason given was (Continued on Last Page)

A quiet gentleman—newly arrived member of our faculty—was the subject of this year’s deepest concern and greatest anxiety as February afternoon recently. Reporters, shed tears of sorrow and anger, as they watched wisely over the campus in which information concerning the professor, Mr. Chapman, progressed. From laboratories to faculty apartments, Mr. Chapman was nowhere found. Even into the precincts of Lyre Tree, they carried their search. The editor hinted at his desk. Mr. Chapman must be found. But Mr. Chapman was found.
